Bea is speaking out against foie gras once again...this time before the American Veterinary Medical Association convention gets underway in Minneapolis this weekend. A "Star Tribune" article under her name urges "the AVMA to condemn the egregious cruelty of foie gras production."

Golden Palace was the show after Bea left the Golden Girls, which in turn closed out that show. So really the question should be why wasn't there any more seasons of the Golden Girls. But, we know the answer to that in the above sentence :)

hehe.

Hey i am here to answer your question. Bea Arthur wanted to leave the The Golden Girls because she felt that to leave while you are at the top is best. She felt that the show was at its best and felt she did everything she could make the show as best it could be. The reason why she wasn't in Golden Palace was because she wanted to take a break and seek new opportunities!:) She did make guest appearances on the show Golden Palace. Watch out for them!

I thought it was great... it would probably be a shock if someone never saw a roast before :)
Very fun though! I'm going to try to get the video up on the site at some point, but it is still rerunning, so catch it if you can!

I've been on vacation, so I'm behind, but tried to catch up on things lately.

Anyone enjoying the reruns of Golden Palace? I am, yes that is right, I am... even though Bea is not in it (except a few shows).

Thanks again for the information Ironicwit that you have been providing!

Anyone going to upcoming shows?

As always, it was a delight to see Bea doing something new...especially since she took a different approach from the other roasters. FYI: I think that Comedy Central must be changing the show around a bit. When I watched it Sunday night, Bea showed up after about half an hour. Last night, I tuned in at about the same time in the program in order to watch Bea again, but she didn't show up when expected. She surfaced a few minutes later; this time, we didn't get to see her whole spiel, just the first excerpt.

As for the roast as a whole, I found it something other than enjoyable. Call me a prude, but I don't think vulgarity is funny. In my eyes, you can tell a dirty joke without being dirty. What makes it funny is the wit, the innuendo, the imagination behind it. Just look at "The Golden Girls." It's oftentimes naughty and frequently funny, but it's never vulgar.

I also felt sorry for Bea. Some of the roasters were downright cruel.

I agree, some roasters were very cruel- DIDN'T LIKE IT AT ALL!! Bea was the only good part of the whole mess...But, to each his own, i understand that some people find crude-humor to be enjoyable, but come on, was it really necessary to teas our beloved Bea like that? I say that if they are ever fortunate enough to be in the presence of our Bea again, NEXT TIME, BE NICE!

Anna-Nicole and I must think alike. Here's what she wrote about Bea and the recent Pamela Anderson roast:

"I actually felt sorry for Bea Arthur. It seemed like she didn't see what was coming. I don't think she expected that some of the jokes would be about her. Some of the jokes were pretty offensive and she got up and left midway through."

Boy, you sure don't hear that quote every day :) Just kidding, I love Anna-Nicole actually!

Yes, it is sad that she left half way through, but Bea has been at other roasts, so I know she knows what they are about... yet probably didn't expect that she would be used so much for jokes. I do not blame her whatsoever for leaving because other people can't think of any other better jokes then to spot out Bea and call it a day!

Thanks for the link!
